The American Scholar is the venerable but lively quarterly magazine of public affairs, literature, science, history, and culture published by the Phi Beta Kappa Society since 1932. In recent years the magazine has won four National Magazine Awards and many of its essays and articles have been selected for the yearly Best American anthologies.

Inspired by Ralph Waldo Emerson’s famous speech, “The American Scholar,” delivered to the Phi Beta Kappa Society at Harvard College in 1837, the magazine aspires to Emerson’s ideals of independent thinking, self–knowledge, and a commitment to the affairs of the world as well as to books, history, and science.

Five students at the College of William and Mary founded Phi Beta Kappa in 1776, during the American Revolution. For over two and a quarter centuries, the Society has embraced the principles of freedom of inquiry and liberty of thought and expression. Laptops have replaced quill pens, but these ideas, Symbolized on Phi Beta Kappa’s distinctive gold key, still lay the foundations of personal freedom, scientific inquiry, liberty of conscience and creative endeavor. Phi Beta Kappa celebrates and advocates excellence in the liberal arts and sciences. Its campus chapters invite for induction the most outstanding arts and sciences students at America’s leading colleges and universities.

The Society sponsors activities to advance these studies the humanities, the social sciences, and the natural sciences in higher education and in society at

QUICK FACTS

- Phi Beta Kappa is a leading advocate for excellence in the liberal arts and sciences.

- We have over half a million members and chapters at 280 American colleges and universities.

- Only about 10 percent of the nation’s institutions of higher learning have Phi Beta Kappa chapters.

- Only about 10 percent of the arts and sciences graduates of these distinguished institutions are selected for Phi Beta Kappa membership.

- Each year, about one college senior in a hundred, nationwide, is invited to join Phi Beta Kappa.

- Membership in Phi Beta Kappa shows commitment to the liberal arts and sciences, and to freedom of inquiry and expression and it provides a competitive edge in the marketplace.
For nearly 20 years, The American Scholar has been one of the rare quarterly magazines to review new books in a timely way—in the same season in which the titles are published. This is absolutely essential to our mission. The Scholar, like all quarterlies, has an uphill climb in the effort to be timely. But book publishing, because of its long lead time, makes timeliness possible for a quarterly. Not easy, but possible.

We have an unusually literate audience, and our readers keep up with new nonfiction books as much as they do movies and television. We devote between 15 and 20 percent of our editorial space to the coverage of new books, and perhaps another 20 percent to other literary topics. That’s about 50 pages per issue, 200 pages a year. And we also feature the author of a new book each week on our “Smarty Pants” podcast. In many ways, books are at the core of what we do. We devote a great deal of time to choosing books wisely for our audience. We know that our readers expect that of us.
